Make Sure New Kitty is Right for Your Home & Family

Families often say that they "just knew it was meant to be" when they met their cat (or dog) for the first time. Before adopting, make sure the pet is right for your family and for your home. No one wants to have to return a pet. Find out what to ask yourself before adopting.

Have Patience When Introducing a New Cat into Your Home

Don't be surprised if a new kitty goes and hides or doesn't want to eat for the first few days. Cats are creatures of habit and most need time to adapt to a new environment. What can you do to help your new kitty adjust?

1. Set up a room (a small bedroom or bathroom are fine) just for the new kitty with a litter box, food, water, toys, and bedding. Let kitty get adjusted to the house a little at a time so it's less overwhelming.

2. When he/she appears comfortable, supervise kitty in exploring the rest of the house. If you have other pets, put them in the new kitty's room at this time to get accustomed to each other's scents.

3. Use Feliway feline pheromones to reduce visible anxiety. It mimics the "happy" pheromones cats release when they mark areas with their faces. It's available as a plug-in diffuser or a spray.

Why Two Cats are Better Than One!

- Cats can get lonely and will bond with each other for companionship. This doesn't detract from their relationship with you!
- Cats with a "sibling" as a playmate have less behavior issues, are kept busy and are less bored.
- You get to save 2 lives instead of one! :)

Wellness Exams Recommended for Newly-Adopted Cats

Living in a shelter or rescue environment with other cats can spread sickness like upper respiratory infection (similar to the common cold). Most homeless pets are examined quickly and signs of other illnesses can be missed. Make an appointment for a wellness exam for your newly-adopted kitty as soon as possible. It's a good idea for your veterinarian to check for:

1. Intestinal parasites: Make sure to bring a fresh stool sample to your appointment. Worms (especially in kittens) are very common and sometimes require more than one deworming treatment. Read more about parasites.

2. Fleas: These little buggers can be very difficult to treat once your home is infested, so it's always better to prevent them in the first place or catch them early. Read more about fleas.

3. Upper respiratory infection: URI in shelters and rescues is common and difficult to control with the number of cats moving through. It's highly contagious and can be passed to resident cats at home. A roughly three-day incubation period may cause cats to seem okay when adopted but start developing symptoms after a few days. URI is easily treated with antibiotics and supportive care. Read more about URI.

4. Feline Leukemia & FIV: These two viruses cause immune deficiency in cats and there is no cure. However cats can live long, happy lives despite being infected, though they do pose a problem if there are existing cats in the household since both diseases are transmittable from cat-to-cat. Most shelters and rescues test cats before they are adopted, but some don't check for both diseases. All cats should have two NEGATIVE FeLV & FIV tests in their lifetime. Keep Kitty Safe From Animal Bites & Other Summer Hazards

Summer can be a dangerous time for kitty. Here are the top five summer hazards that we see most often at The Cat Practice.

1. Abscesses. Cats who go outside, especially at night/twilight, are MUCH more likely to get into fights and end up with a nasty bite or wound. If left untreated, bites and wounds can fester and become a painful abscess (pocket of infection) requiring medical treatment. Bites from other cats also spread Feline Leukemia and FIV, so cats spending any time outdoors should be tested annually.

2. Poisoning. Cats often nibble on indoor and outdoor greenery. Some are toxic, especially any variety of lily, which causes kidney failure in cats. Check your landscaping against the toxic plants list at <http://thecatpracticepc.com/hazards.htm>.

3. Over-the-counter topical flea and tick medication. Some medications purchased at pet stores are not controlled by the FDA or EPA and can lead to life-threatening reactions. Some topical treatments made for dogs can kill a cat. Get flea, tick and heartworm medication from your veterinarian.

4. Insect stings and insect-borne diseases. Bee stings and spider bites can cause allergic-type reactions in cats requiring veterinary care. Heartworm disease is spread by mosquitoes (we have a lot in Michigan!) and is on the rise in cats. All cats should be on a monthly heartworm preventative.

5. Lost or trapped. Outdoor cats often get trapped without food or water when they try to find shelter from the hot sun. If you must let your cat go outdoors, bring kitty inside during the hottest part of the day and before nightfall. Make sure your cat is microchipped and wears a collar with tag.

Plan Now for 4th of July Fireworks

It's not uncommon for cats to be afraid of loud noises, especially thunder and fireworks. Help desensitize your cat in advance by playing these sounds at a lower volume. Increase the volume as your cat becomes more comfortable.

A Cat's Not Just a Cat!

Breed Profile: Egyptian Mau

The Egyptian Mau breed is thought to have originated in Italy in the 1950s and is descended from cats brought from Egypt. The Mau, a relatively rare breed, is slender and muscular, and slightly shorter in the front than in back. Maus have a skin fold under the belly, similar to that of the cheetah, which helps make them fast runners.

One of the most recognizable traits of the breed is the long, dark, dorsal stripe that runs along the cat's spine, from head to tail. Maus come in five colors: silver, bronze, smoke, black and blue/pewter.

The Mau is loyal and friendly. It is also more temperature sensitive than most breeds being fond of very warm places. Maus are also more sensitive to medicines and anesthesia.

Cat's Meow Tip: Hideaway Cat Dining Area

Our kitchen is small and guests often tripped over kitty food bowls. So when we installed a new pantry, recessed back from the main kitchen, our contractor included a pull out kitty dining "table." This drawer-like feature enables our kitties to leisurely dine, and when food bowls are empty, the drawer goes back under the pantry. The drawer design also keeps stray food from going all over the floor. A water fountain is in a separate area of the kitchen.
